ABSTRACT

Nowadays, higher education is a stepping stone to competence. Working adults choose to improve themselves by taking part-time course. However, study and working at the same time is a big challenge for them. This paper examined the learning behaviour of working adults studying part time. It is included the preferred study loads, ways to maintain study-work-life balance, challenges faced during part-time studies and methods for overcoming the challenges. Data were obtained from 50 working adults studying part time selected from IBS College Miri using convenient sampling. Finally, the results will be beneficial to the future working adults who are interested in studying part-time and higher education industry.
